The Pain's Gone —

PACKERS ARE OPTIMISTIC

By Art Daley — Editor, Green Bay Packer Yearbook

The headline on the story in this Packer Yearbook space a year ago read: "Packers A Contender."

It turned out to be false. The Packers came home with a 5-11 record, well below contending caliber.

The previous year the Packers posted an impressive 8-7-1 record, just missing the playoffs.

Thus, there was this thinking that they would improve on their record and become a contender for playoff duty.

The astute Tom Landry, the Dallas Cowboys' only head coach, remarked last winter that often a team will come along and play beyond its capacity and then drop back to reality the following year. He felt this is what happened to Green Bay.

Those are kind and logical words but the 1979 season still remains as very painful to Packer diehards and, of course, Coach Bart Starr and his aides.

Painful is perhaps the way to put it since the 1979 Packers were virtually reduced to a skeleton of its potential by an unbelievable string of injuries. The old cliche about teams playing above injuries was a little ridiculous in this case.

As an example, the Pack came up with a new offensive concept built around their spectacular running back, Eddie Lee Ivery. But Eddie Lee went down for the season in the first quarter of the opener in Chicago. Three games later, another promising rookie RB went down, Steve Atkins. Then it was workhorse Barty Smith.

It got so bad that in the second Bear game the Pack was down to one injuried back, Eric Torkelson, and one back who didn't know the plays, Ricky Patton. Yet, the Pack lost by only one, 15-14.

Defensively, the Pack lost three potential all-pros, John Anderson, out in an early scrimmage with a broken arm; and the defense ends, Ezra Johnson and Mike Butler. Johnson was leveled with an ankle injury in the fourth game and Butler was bothered by a dislocated elbow all season.

But that was a year ago and it has no bearing on this first year of the Packers' seventh decade of operation.

There's a great deal of optimism streaming forth from the Pack's headquarters at 1265 Lombardi Avenue. Quite a bit of this stemmed from the enthusiasm of the rookies and the veterans at their separate mini-camps in late spring.

The big plus, of course, was the excellent recovery shown by all of the injured, including Quarterback Lynn Dickey, who had a rod removed from his lower leg during the winter.

This marks the first year that Starr has two of his own veteran quarterbacks right from the beginning. Dickey and veteran David Whitehurst, opening his fourth year, will battle for the starting job and they'll have five pre-season games in which to settle it. To add more competition, another veteran QB has been added, Billy Troup, former Baltimore Colt and Canadian player.

The offense seems on the edge of being one of the best in the league but it badly needs a spark and the two keys will be one of the quarterbacks and at least one of the backs, who would have to be in that 800 to 1,000-yard range.

The rest is up to the receivers, headed by James Lofton and Paul Coffman, and the offensive line, which wasn't the devastating force it was figured to be in 1979. Several offensive linemen were drafted in hopes of creating more competition.

As noted on Page 8, the Packers will have a new look on defense. Coach John Meyer has replaced the departed Dave Hanner as defensive coordinator and he has promised that his unit will play quite a bit of 3-4 defenses — plus mix it up considerable with other maneuvers.

With the loss of first choice Bruce Clark to Canada (he figured to play nose guard), the key figures now will be Terry Jones, who played so well down the stretch last year, and Charley Johnson, a rookie in '79. Another key figure on the defense line might be big Casey Merrill, who displayed a flash of form as a mid-season arrival last year. Butler and Johnson will handle the end spots.

Headed by Rich Wingo and Anderson, the linebacking will be the key to the "34". Strong performances are expected from Gary Weaver, Mike Douglass and Mike Hunt, who was among the injured last year. First round pick George Cumby is expected to help at LB also.

A new coach, Ross Fichtner, who replaced Dick LeBeau, will take over the secondary. This group could be helped by the addition of Mark Lee, a second round draft pick, and one more year's experience for young Estus Hood, who replaced Willie Buchanan in 1979.

There likely will be a hot battle for the place-kicking job between veteran Chester Marcol and Tom Birney, a newcomer who replaced injured Chester midway through the 1979 season and hit on 7 of 9 field goals, including a record-tying four in the finale at Detroit.

The special teams job will be presided over by a new coach, John Marshall, who replaced Fred von Appen. Fred will now work with the defensive line. A third new coach, Tom Lovat, will assist Ernie McMillan with the offensive line. Lovat replaced Bill Curry who went into college coaching.

Much has been said about the Packers' rough schedule this season since it includes both Super Bowl finalists of last January, the Steelers and Rams, and the annually tough Cowboys, even without Roger Staubach.

The key for Green Bay is the Central Division opposition — the Buccaneers, Bears, Vikings and Lions. The Packers play home and home with each — or a total of eight of the 16 games.

The Bucs and Bears each posted 10-6 records in 1979 and made the playoffs. The Vikings finished with 9-7 and Lions 2-14.

The Packers lost two games to the Bears by a total of four points; they split with the Vikings (the loss was in overtime); and they beat Detroit twice. They lost two to the Bucs.

The Bucs surprised a lot of people last year and, according to Landry's aforementioned thinking, could drop off this year. The Bears will always be tough and the Vikings seem a little more human without Fran Tarkenton and the Lions are rebuilding.

Packers look to happiness in 1980 like Barty Smith, Larry McCarren and Terdell Middleton after Middleton's TD in Minnesota in 1979.

The thinking in Packerville is that Green Bay ranks about even overall with all four of their Central foes. Thus, it would seem that they'd have an even chance to win the Central Division title.

The Packers' crucial games against Central opposition is well spread out during the season. They play the Bears and Lions in Games 1 and 2 and then don't play another until they meet the Bucs in Game 6. Then it's the Vikings in Game 8, the Vikings again in Game 12, the Bucs in Game 13, the Bears in Game 14 and the Lions in Game 16.

Thus, the Packers play Central foes in four of the last five games . . . It could be interesting.

But, then, all Packer seasons are interesting. It's just that some are more interesting than others.

Operating rooms were nothing new to Lynn Dickey. He'd been there before on numerous occasions to repair, among other things, a broken hip, a separated shoulder and a broken leg — souvenirs he'd acquired in a checkered 9-year career in the National Football League.

But even an ol' hospital veteran like Dickey didn't quite know what to expect when they wheeled him into the operating room at the Research Medical Center in Kansas City, MO, Jan. 7.

There, Dr. Howard Ellfeldt, orthopedic surgeon for the Kansas City Chiefs, removed an 18-inch, one-pound hollow steel rod from Dickey's left leg. Dr. Ellfeldt had hammered that rod down the length of the tibia in an earlier operation.

After that earlier operation, Dickey felt a constant stab of pain in his left leg. Doctors told him the rod was causing that pain. Dickey found that hard to believe because the rod was completely immersed in a bone and wasn't sticking out. Dr. Ellfeldt reassured Dickey that once the rod was removed from his leg, his pain would disappear.

Dr. Ellfeldt was correct. When he pulled the rod out of Dickey's leg, the pain vanished, almost instantaneously.

"Without a doubt, this is the best I've felt since I broke my leg," said Dickey.

Now that he's healthy again, Dickey is as excited as a frisky colt while he awaits the 1980 season. That excitement is shared by his employers, the Green Bay Packers.

OF QBs

For the first time in coach Bart Starr's regime at Green Bay, the Packers go into a season with two healthy, if not proven, quarterbacks — Dickey and David Whitehurst, a three-year veteran.

"We're solid there right now, we can win with both of those people," acknowledged backfield coach Zeke Bratkowski.

Whitehurst replaced Dickey when Dickey broke his left leg against the Los Angeles Rams at Milwaukee County Stadium Nov. 13, 1977. With Dickey rendered hors de combat, Whitehurst started 34 consecutive games, enjoying a modicum of success.

When Whitehurst couldn't get the Packers rolling against the Philadelphia Eagles late last fall, Starr benched him and brought on Dickey in the second half. Dickey then started the team's final three games, guiding Green Bay to a narrow 18-13 win over the Detroit Lions and a near-miss, 15-14 loss against arch-rival Chicago.

A lot of people were surprised when the Packers didn't use Dickey much earlier last season, but Dickey wasn't one of them.

"I would have been hard pressed to go in and play in the first five or six games because I wasn't up to par physically," Dickey admitted. "It wasn't until around mid-season that I started to feel better."

An intensely proud young man, Whitehurst initially was crushed when he was benched.

"In that first game when I was on the bench, I guess I did sulk a little bit and pouted," Whitehurst recalled. "But then I saw some of the same things happening to Lynn out there that were happening to me. Things he didn't really have any control over."

What Whitehurst saw were Packer receivers repeatedly drop passes that should have been caught; Green Bay's erratic running attack pile up gobs of yards one game, and then sputter ineffectively the next; opponents run up the gut with frightening regularity on Green Bay's papier-mache defense, and the 30-second clock run out on Dickey just as it had on him earlier.

As distasteful as his demotion was, Whitehurst profited from it. He realized that neither he nor Dickey were to blame for many of the bad things that hastened the Packers' downfall. He also realized that there was no sense in fretting and brooding about situations he couldn't control. Furthermore, a more relaxed Whitehurst, watching avidly from the sidelines, began to read defenses better and gain a deeper understanding of the game.

Whitehurst didn't get much of an opportunity to relax while the Packers were losing nine of the 13 games he started last fall. Certain segments of the press saw to that. His detractors came down hard on the sensitive former Furman star. His stormy relationship with the press reached its nadir after the young, rambunctious Tampa Bay Buccanneers pummelled the Packers, 21-10.

After that game, Bud Lea, sports editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel, chided Whitehurst's performance and said he lacked comeback abilities. That bothered Whitehurst.

"I'm not sour on the press and I feel about 90% of the press has been fair with me," said Whitehurst. "But I don't think Bud Lea was fair when he came down on me after the Tampa game. He said I didn't have any comeback capabilities. The week before we were down, 12-0, at halftime against New Orleans and came back to win. The guy must have totally forgot about that."

There are certain harrowing events that occurred last fall that Dickey would like to file away and forget, but he can't. They keep recurring, like some bad dream that just refuses to go away. At the top of Dickey's ill-fated list is the second Chicago game. It's a game the Packers probably should have won. The only reason they didn't is that Dickey had the misfortune of throwing a costly interception deep in Bear territory in the fourth quarter. Linebacker Tom Hicks plucked it off and returned it 66 yards for a touchdown.

Dickey still vividly remembers that moment.

"I got hit trying to throw the ball away," said Dickey. "I didn't have any steam on it at all. It just kind of fluttered out there. I had big Alan Page on top of me and when I looked up and saw Tom Hicks running down the field, it was definitely a low, low point of the season."

To Whitehurst's way of thinking, what transpired in the draft last April, represented a high point of sorts for both him and Dickey.

Many knowledgeable observers had expected the Packers to draft Brigham Young quarterback Marc Wilson if he were still available. But the Packers confounded many experts by passing over Wilson and taking Penn State defensive tackle Bruce Clark instead.

That move made it perfectly clear that the Packers have hitched their quarterback wagon to the Dickey-Whitehurst tandem, come hell or high water. And it also did wonders for Whitehurst's shaky confidence.

"When I was benched during the year I really began to doubt how good I was," said Whitehurst. "I had some negative press and sometimes if you read enough of it, you start believing it yourself.

"When they didn't draft a quarterback, it just sorta reassured me that the Packers had confidence I could play and in the quarterbacks they already had. The way I look at it, I'd much rather the starting quarterback be Lynn rather than a first or second round draft choice just coming in."

Neither Bratkowski nor Starr is saying just who their starting quarterback will be. Even Dickey and Whitehurst are in the dark as to what the Packer quarterback plans are. The only thing Bratkowski will say is

LYNN DICKEY FINALLY GETS NO. 12

10, 11 and now 12.

Lynn Dickey wore No. 10 on his jersey while quarterbacking the Osawatomie, Kansas High School team.

He wore No. 11 during his collegiate career at Kansas State.

Dickey originally wanted to wear No. 12 when he came into pro football in 1971 but the Houston Oilers' veteran QB, Charley Johnson, was wearing it.

When Dickey was traded to Green Bay in 1976, Don Milan was wearing No. 12.

Now completely healthy and No. 12 available, Dickey asked and received permission to wear "12" starting in 1980.

that he expects a very, very competitive fight for the starting quarterback position between Dickey and Whitehurst.

"We'll have to watch Lynn's progress closely," Bratkowski pointed out. "I think it's going to be very positive. I know he has a renewed positive attitude because of how much better he feels and that's going to make David a better quarterback too. It's going to be very beneficial to our team to have those two people in real true competition."

Bratkowski gave both Dickey and Whitehurst high marks for their 1979 performances.

"The thing about David is that he's improved every year we've had him," said Bratkowski. "There's been a marked improvement in his passing statistics. He was nearly 56% last year (compared to 51% in 1978).

"I think Lynn performed very well for having played as little as he did last year and for having that big, dumb brace on his leg and the pain. It was a good chance for us to get a look at him."

Whitehurst has it all over Dickey when it comes to youth and mobility, but the experience factor is heavily weighted in Dickey's favor. Dickey is a very analytical student of the game. He tries to take advantage of what he can do best. And if the defensive situation presents itself, he can call audibles with the best of them.

Dickey has a penchant for making the big plays. He's no scrambler or running threat, but then how many quarterbacks are? Some Whitehurst detractors claim he can't throw the sideline pass, but he staunchly denies this.

"I know I can throw a sideline pass," said Whitehurst. "Some days I can't throw it and unfortunately some of those days fall on Sundays."

Whitehurst completed enough passes, including some sideline tosses, last fall that he came within 12 passes of tying John Hadl's single season club record of 191 completions. He undoubtedly would have shattered Hadl's mark if he hadn't been benched for the final three games of the season.

Whitehurst, however, isn't bitter that he wasn't given a chance to erase Hadl's mark.

"It's always nice to be able to look back and find your name in the record book," said Whitehurst. "But if I can't do it in the future then there's no place for my name in the record book. I just hope it's early in my career and I'll have many more years ahead of me where I'll be able to start."

Even if Whitehurst is relegated to a reserve role, he says he won't ask the Packers to trade him.

"I think I can be very realistic about that," said Whitehurst. "I feel it'll be handled very well by coach Starr."

Whitehurst doesn't envision the Packer brain trust playing a game of musical quarterbacks with himself and Dickey, much like Denver did a year ago with Craig Morton and Norris Weese.

"I don't feel coach Starr thinks that is the way to it," Whitehurst said. "If one of us has a couple of bad games, he may start the other quarterback, but I don't feel he'll mix us up in one game."

Considering his age — 30 — and all the injuries he's had to endure, might Dickey be tempted to retire should Whitehurst beat him out?

No way!

"I wouldn't think of retiring, not with all the setbacks I've had," said Dickey. "I've been fighting and working too long to get myself back in shape after breaking my leg. I'm not ready to quit. I want to keep on playing. When I walk away from football, I want to say, 'I played all that I wanted to.' I haven't reached that point yet."

Even though the two are rivals, Dickey and Whitehurst get along very well and seem to genuinely like each other. Bratkowski thinks that's a very healthy situation.

Providing even more competition, the Packers signed a third veteran quarterback as a free agent in a mid-summer deal. He is Billy Troup, 29, former Baltimore Colt passer, who played in Winnipeg last year.

Troup, a big one at 6-5 and 220 pounds, completed 162 of 316 passes for 1,999 yards during his four years with the Colts. He started 11 games in 1978 when Bert Jones was injured, completing 154 of 296 passes for 1,882 yards and 10 touchdowns. He also threw 21 interceptions. At Winnipeg, Troup completed 81 of 148 passes for 963 yards and three TDs.

Troup actually came up with the Eagles, signing as a free agent out of South Carolina in 1974. He was traded to Baltimore the next year.

A New Look on DEFENSE

By Cliff Christl
Green Bay Press-Gazette

John Meyer sat at his office desk, with the steel pillars and cement tiers of Lambeau Field's underside serving as a backdrop, and didn't mince any words as he studied the sheet of paper in front of him.

"I look at these statistics, and no matter what I look at, it makes me sick," said Meyer.

Twenty-third in the National Football League in total defense. Twenty-eighth, or last, in yards allowed rushing. Twenty-seventh in net takeaways. Twenty-second in the percent of completions allowed, etc., etc.

Those dreadful figures belonged to the Green Bay Packers' defense in 1979 and are the reason Meyer looks like he just contacted ptomaine poisoning every time he digests their meaning.

They also are the reason the Packer defense will have a new look in 1980.

There will be new faces on the field. Linebacker George Cumby and cornerback Mark Lee were selected in the first two rounds of the draft. There will be a new alignment. The standard 4-3 is out and the voguish 3-4 is in. And there will be new direction. Dave Hanner, after 28 years with the team, including 15 as a coach, is out as defensive coordinator and Meyer is in.

Additionally, all of Meyer's aides will be new. Fred vonAppen, the special teams coach a year ago, will handle the defensive line. Ross Fichtner has replaced the departed Dick LeBeau as secondary coach. And John Marshall has been added to the staff to help Meyer with the linebackers, along with coordinating the special teams.

The new additions have little pro experience, but, according to Meyer, they have the necessary expertise. "I think the coaches we have now are very well versed in the 3-4," he said.

"Before, nobody had any experience in the 3-4. Now, we've got at least two coaches — Fred vonAppen and John Marshall — well versed in line and linebacker play."

Over the past 21 years there have been alterations in the Packer defense, but few radical changes. The philosophy has basically stayed the same.

Phil Bengtson, the mastermind behind the Packers' defensive success in the '60s, brought it here in 1959 when he joined Vince Lombardi's original staff. And Hanner, a disciple, continued adhering to it in the '70s.

Now, Meyer and his staff are promising a fresh approach.

Though still a youthful 38, Meyer brings 11 years of experience to his new post. He has been an assistant with the Packers for five years, and before that he was with New England and Detroit.

Snapped on a windy day, John Meyer promises a fresh approach on defense.

Practical considerations prompted him to give up his playing career at the tender age of 25 and after just two years in pro ball. "My second year at Houston, I had my fifth knee operation and George Webster was a rookie," related Meyer. "(So) I decided to hang it up."

The decision made sense. But after a few weeks of selling color TVs to supplement my income while his knee mended, Meyer realized he wasn't ready to completely divorce himself from football.

"After awhile, I just said, 'I can't stand this,' " Meyer recalled. "So I went to Don Klosterman, who was the general manager with the Oilers, and said, 'Since you've got to pay me,' — I was on injured reserve at the time — 'why don't you put me to work?' "

Klosterman agreed that he had nothing to lose and added Meyer to his scouting staff. But that job also had its drawbacks. Spending weeks at a time on the road looking at college prospects is a good way to ruin a happy family life.

That's when Meyer decided he wanted to become a coach. And it was Clive Rush, who had just accepted the head job at New England, who overlooked Meyer's lack of experience and gave him his first job.

Coaching was more a labor of love to Meyer and he remained reasonably satisfied for the next six years. Then, following the 1974 season, he decided to leave Rick Forzano's staff at Detroit — his departure at New England two years earlier was part of a wholesale housecleaning — and join Bart Starr's in Green Bay.

Again, Meyer was content. And he stayed that way until the past year or so when he began feeling pangs of restlessness.

"I had been a linebacker coach for 11 years and I think I was getting into a rut," said Meyer. "I was looking forward to another challenge, but I didn't see any way of getting it here.

"But when this opportunity presented itself, I had the best of all situations. I could stay in Green Bay — I really like it here — and be presented with a challenge I think I'm ready for."

Less than two weeks after the completion of the '79 season, Hanner was fired and Meyer was immediately named as his replacement. Meyer would have preferred getting the job under different circumstances. He considers Hanner a friend. And he also believes Hanner took a larger brunt of the blame for the team's woeful defensive showing last year than he deserved.

"I think Dick (LeBeau) and I could be as easily criticized," Meyer candidly admitted. "All three of us had input into what we were doing. But Dave took all the heat, which I feel a little bad about."

While Meyer feels compassion for Hanner and refuses to criticize him, he obviously doesn't agree with everything he did. Otherwise, Meyer wouldn't be contemplating as many changes as he is. He plans to deal with the players differently and view defensive strategy from a far different perspective.

The players, in turn, appear to welcome that news. They greeted Meyer's appointment with considerable enthusiasm.

"If we're properly motivated, we could be a sleeping giant," John Meyer.

They find Meyer to be imaginative — a contemporary thinker with a fertile defensive mind. They find him to be approachable — one of the more genuine and less pious assistants that Starr has had. And they find him to be even-tempered — stern at times, but never a raging tyrant.

"I'm not a screamer and shouter," Meyer freely admits.

However, that doesn't mean he doesn't intend to be tough. There were some defensive players in recent years who took a half-hearted approach to practice. And Meyer guaranteed that anything less than an all-out effort won't be allowed any longer.

"I've gotten one chance to do something and I'm going to do it," he declared. "Everybody is going to come up to our expectations. We're not going to go down to their expectations.

"I think we've got a great majority of players who want it that way. They want to be good and we want them to be good."

Although it didn't show on the field last season, Meyer believes the Packers have the personnel to be a solid defensive unit. He regards defensive ends Mike Butler and Ezra Johnson, and linebacker John Anderson as Pro Bowl caliber players. He regards safeties Johnnie Gray and Steve Luke, and middle linebacker Rich Wingo as strong inspirational staples.

"I think if we're properly motivated, we could be a sleeping giant," said Meyer. "Basically, you've got to demand a lot out of people. Then, you'll get more than they're willing to give. That's the secret to good defense — getting people to give more than they think they're capable of giving."

Ross Fichtner

John Marshall

The defense's failure to play up to capacity last season is one of the major reasons why the Packers are switching to the 3-4. Meyer doesn't believe the 3-4, alone, will be a panacea. He has no illusions about that.

But he has followed how the 3-4 revived several other once hapless defenses without a great influx of new talent. And he thinks it could help do the same for the Packers.

"We saw teams we felt had no better personnel than we have doing a helluva lot better job of stopping people than we did," said Meyer, following an exhaustive off-season film study of other defenses in the NFL. "For example, Philadelphia and Buffalo, two teams I think we can match up with very evenly, got more out of their people."

Another primary reason for switching to the 3-4 is that Meyer believes it is better tailored to the team's personnel. He considers linebacker to be the strongest and deepest of the defensive units, while tackle has been a perennial weakness.

The Packers have used the 3-4 before. They experimented with it in training camp two years ago and used it extensively during portions of last season.

But the 3-4 as it was played in the past compared with how it will be deployed this season will be vastly different. This year's version will be more flexible and innovative, according to Meyer.

The personnel will be alternated, the coverages varied and the tactics up front less predictable. In fact, the Packers don't intend to use the 3-4 any more than 70 percent of the time. In obvious passing situations, they'll insert a fourth lineman and either one or two extra backs.

"The 3-4 we envision playing, we hope to make more dynamic," said Meyer. "I wouldn't call it gambling. We're going to try some calculated maneuvers. We're going to put people on the move in our defense as opposed to sitting there and reacting. We're going to be aggressive on defense."

There's a danger, of course, that the Packers could go overboard in mixing up their defenses. But Meyer said he is well aware of that, too.

"I don't want to burden the players with so much, they can't handle it all," he said. "I'd rather do a few things well than a lot of things in mediocre fashion."

Compared to last year that would be an accomplishment. And it might make this season's defensive stats more palatable.

RICH WINGO — Hard Part's Over

By Jill Lieber
The Milwaukee Sentinel

The hard part's over for Rich Wingo. He's just glad he can look back and laugh about it.

And that he lived to tell his buddies on the Green Bay Packer squad.

Hard part? Didn't the rest of the Packers' defensive unit go through the rough times last season with the rookie middle linebacker? The confusing new system — being thrust into the role of defensive signal caller when starter Michael Hunt was sidelined with a concussion. The adjustment to pro ball — the travel, life in a foreign town, getting along with new people, trying to fit in gracefully.

But no. That was easy — so easy that with some extra work, Wingo was named by the Wisconsin pro football writers as the Packers' defensive player of the year and rookie of the year. He also was named on two all-rookie NFL teams.

The hard part, you see, began years earlier. Growing up a 'bama boy was not all hush puppies and grits. Especially since Wingo didn't go through the process until he stepped foot on the Tuscaloosa campus, a tuft-faced freshman loaded down with suitcases.

When the first whistle blew . . . the bear growled . . . the two-a-day workouts began . . . and the homesickness started to sink in. That's when the hard part started.

"Choosing Alabama was simple," Wingo said. "Notre Dame was 10 miles away from my home in Elkhart, Indiana, and I was born and raised in the Big 10. Besides that, I remember watching Alabama play Tennessee on TV my senior year, and Wilbur Jackson, Alabama's big fullback, and Buddy Brown, their offensive tackle, pulled off one of the neatest plays I've ever seen.

"Jackson broke through the line and then cut back, Brown back stepped, and when Jackson passed him, he patted him on his butt as if to say, 'Keep Going.'

"That made me want to go to Alabama.

"But my freshman year there I was so miserable," Wingo said. "I was homesick. I remember Coach Bryant called me up and told me when he went to college his roommate used to cry every night he was so homesick. I told him I wasn't at that stage yet.

"The playing helped me. The traveling did, too."

There were other things to get used to. Cheri, his wife of a few months, remembers them well.

"I was raised in the South," she said, with a thick accent. "Rich had a hard time getting used to southern girls. When we met his sophomore year, we had conflicts we had to work out.

"I was raised to be a lady. I had never mowed the grass. He had two older sisters who always worked around the house, and he thought I was lazy.

"Now, he loves the southern way. It's so much easier, slower. He sleeps later. But at first, it was hard for him."

His second year at Alabama was just as difficult. There were three All-

Americans ahead of him at his position. So, Bear Bryant red shirted Wingo — much to Wingo's dismay.

"It tore me apart," Wingo said. "I had always wanted to be with a winner, and when I didn't play, I wondered if I could make it in football anywhere else.

"That spring I met Cheri, and she helped me get over it. She also calmed me down."

He had gotten a bit rowdy with all that time on his hands. New York Jets quarterback Richard Todd, at Alabama during that time, calls Wingo "A crazy."

"Well, ol' Dick doesn't know what he's talkin' about," Wingo said, with a laugh. "I was fun-loving. The football players lived in Bryant Hall, and right next door was a fraternity. We had problems with parking our cars because we shared a parking lot with them.

"One day we came back from practice and those frat rats had put dirty notes on our cars. So, we blew up their homecoming float. I didn't do it. I was in the back helping set a land speed record of slitting tires — 63 tires in five minutes."

The next season, his second year of eligibility, Wingo thought once he put his cleats on, things would start looking up. He was almost right. "That year, no one had ever heard of Barry Krause," he said. "I was listed in the pre-season All-American polls. But I had a terrible year.

"I broke my hand, tore ligaments in my ankle. And Barry came into his own."

Well, Rich, what about your junior year? Don't ask.

"I was kicked off the team," Wingo said. "No one who has ever been kicked off the team — except Joe Namath, and he was suspended — has ever come back.

"We were going through a drill, and Coach Bryant told me to do it again — alone. I did it, then he said, 'Do it again.' Then he said, 'Wingo, get off the field.'

"I was stunned. I waited for him in his office, and we talked for an hour and ten minutes. That's when I got to know him.

"He told me I was a good guy and a good football player, but that I wasn't hustling enough and that he and I couldn't get along because of that.

"He told me I could go to USC or Notre Dame — he'd get me in. He didn't sound like I was going to stay at Alabama. I told him I wanted to stay. He said he'd go home and pray about it.

"The next morning, I came back, shaking. He let me back on the team."

That meeting with Bear Bryant changed Wingo. For the first time, his eyes were focused in the right direction — looking straight to the future. Every movement he made from that time on was done with an added umph.

If Wingo hadn't had that drive, he probably wouldn't have made it to the NFL.

"My senior year, I severed a lower back muscle," Wingo said. "I thought I was paralyzed. I could barely walk, and I couldn't sit down. It hurt a lot — it took six weeks to heal. I thought for sure no NFL team would want me.

"So, for my last college game — the Sugar Bowl against Penn State — I begged Coach Bryant to let me play the second half. Barry and I were in on the goal line stance that won the game for us.

"That was great — but I thought that was the end of football for me," he said. "You can get lost at Alabama, there are so many good players. Coach Bryant talked to a lot of teams about me, but I thought it was all over, and I had this terrible feeling that I'd never be fulfilled."

The most important person Bryant talked to was John Meyer, the Packers' linebacker coach. Wingo had had a few nibbles from pro teams, but nothing he thought would lead to a solid shot at the NFL.

Enter Meyer, who actually came to campus to meet Wingo. The two talked; Wingo put his whole heart and soul into the physical tests Meyer had him try.

The rest, as they say, is history.

"I've always had a football sense," said Wingo, the Packers' seventh-round draft. "That goes along with liking what I do.

"I'll always remember rookie camp. I was the first guy to sing for the veterans. They caught me off guard, and the only song I could think of was 'The Oscar Mayer Wiener Song.'

"And I always remember the New England game, because we all worked so well together. I'll remember the overwhelming feeling I had when I had to call the signals, and I can look back at all the improvements I made in the classroom. I never knew the offense as well as I do now."

Wingo hopes he can enjoy his years in the pros, that he won't have to spend time fighting his way into a conflicting system or fighting injuries and his rebel spirit, like he had to at Alabama.

"My biggest drive comes from the fact that I don't like to lose," Wingo said. "It's hard to talk about last season, I'm ashamed of it.

"I'm ashamed that I started thinking that we were going to lose, too. Football became a dreaded job to me.

"For instance, in the third quarter of the Miami game, we were really getting bombed. I thought to myself, 'We're going to lose.' And for about 15 minutes, I played with that attitude. Then, I got mad at myself, and I went nuts. I played so hard — and I vowed never to think about losing again.

"I love my job. I love football," Wingo said. "I hope that I'll always be able to look at any other job I may have as a challenge and put forth as much energy. You only go around one time, you've got to give it everything you've got. That's the way I'll always live, and that's the way I'll always play."

Pack Progressing Via Draft—Bart

By Lee Remmel — Green Bay Packer Director of Public Relations

Bryan Bartlett Starr, a man of great patience and perseverance, is accustomed to doing things the hard way.

To him, it has been a personal fact of life since his high school days, when a now humorous episode from that early period took a dramatic hand in shaping his basic philosophy.

"When I was a sophomore at Montgomery (AL.) High School, I was third or fourth string on the 'B' squad," he will tell you — and add with characteristic candor, "I thought I was better than the boy playing ahead of me, who was making the trips with the team. So I came home and announced I was quitting football.

"My father said, 'That's fine. Tomorrow night, when you come home from school, cut down the cornstalks and turn over all the earth in the garden."

Chuckling fondly at the memory, he says, "My dad knew how much I hated to work in the garden. The next day, I went back to practice and I never missed one after that. My dad, who now is retired and lives in Montgomery, has laughed about that a jillion times since."

The Packers' head coach and general manager, a trim and youthful 46, terms that now distant day a milestone in his life. "It was a great lesson for me," he says. "Nothing has come easy for me. I was not that gifted at throwing the ball, for example. It was an indication I was going to have to work hard for everything, for whatever success I've had. I learned a great lesson early."

Despite the successes he eventually achieved on the playing field, where he quarterbacked the Packers to an unprecedented five world championships in a seven-year span, the record eloquently underscores Starr's statement. The man who came to be known as the most successful field general in pro football history did not become entrenched as a starting quarterback until his sixth season in the National Football League.

There are different and unrelated reasons for what has transpired in his current role as the Packers' head coach and general manager, but Starr acknowledges there is a parallel to his early days as a player in his meticulous and painstaking efforts to rebuild the Packers via the draft.

"It has been a little more difficult than we anticipated," he says of this imposing project, undertaken in 1975. He adds, "I've been able to fully appreciate the need to have your top choices if, indeed, that is to be your method of developing your team.

"For current example, we had Carl Barzilauskas for just two years. We gave up a fourth and a fifth round pick to get him, which may or may not have seemed like very much at the time, but, if you get only two years from a player trading away picks like that, you ultimately have hurt your team, not helped it. The only teams who can afford to make trades like that are those who are on the threshold of a championship and need immediate help for that particular year. There were two players we could have drafted at the time who would be on our team right now. I will never be influenced again to make a trade which involves a guy who doesn't like to train in the off-season."

At the same time, and despite this kind of disappointment, Starr is confident the corner has been turned. Having made at the outset an unswerving commitment to rebuilding through the draft, he says he now is beginning to see evidence of hard-won progress — and good hope for more artistically prosperous days ahead.

"The last three drafts have brought us some badly needed additional strength," says the Packers' highly articulate overseer, deprived of first, second and third round selections in his first draft (1975) and first and second picks in his second (1976) because of the now infamous trade with the Los Angeles Rams in 1974. He mentioned no names, but it wasn't necessary. The recent record shows that no fewer than 11 present Packer starters have been gleaned from the 1977, '78, and '79 talent pools — wide receiver James Lofton, guards Derrel Gofourth and Leotis Harris, tackle Greg Koch, running back Terdell Middleton, defensive ends Mike Butler and Ezra Johnson, linebackers John Anderson, Rich Wingo and Mike Douglass and cornerback Estus Hood.

The jury obviously is still out on the 1980 draft, marred somewhat by the loss of No. 1 choice Bruce Clark to Canada. "Despite that disappointment," Starr said, "we still feel this year's draft will prove to be a productive one for us. We feel confident our top choices, as well as several others, will become valuable additions and prominent contributors in the months and years ahead."

Reflection upon the recent record of success prompted him to add, "We have learned a valuable lesson any time there has been a poor choice. Tom Perko of Pittsburgh was not a good choice in 1976 in the fourth round, for example. There were better players around.

"At that time, we had not developed that area (the East Coast) through our scouting to the degree that we needed to. As a result, we relied too heavily on reports and made a mistake. This was our mistake — we had no one to blame but ourselves.

"I personally blame myself for the error we made in drafting Rick Scribner in 1977, because I was overly influenced by one of our coaches. We were new at involving our coaches in draft preparations and learned, the hard way, that impressions and feelings must be tempered relative to the amount of exposure they had with the player, as opposed to our scouts.

"That was our most disappointing pick — the one that I regret more than any other because I passed on Charles Hannah from Alabama knowing full well that he came from a better program, knew more about winning and probably would be a much more productive player long range.

"We could have drafted a truly outstanding first five players had we hit on that one," Starr soberly points out, "because that was the year we had Mike Butler, Ezra Johnson, Greg Koch and Terdell Middleton, who was chosen right after Scribner in the third round. So if we had had a winner in that 3-A slot, we would have another quality football player on this team right now.

"We later got Derrel Gofourth in the seventh round, a sensational pick and a steal in David Whitehurst in the eighth."

These productive results stem from a massive overhaul, expansion and upgrading of the Packer personnel department and scouting staff, as well as the development of an organized and scientific approach to the drafting process effected during Starr's tenure.

The situation thus is a far cry from the one in which the Packer coach found himself upon taking over his dual role in late 1974. At that point, the Packers had only two full-time talent scouts — Baby Ray and Dick Corrick — and the talent-rich Big Ten Conference was being handled by a retired high school coach, who scouted only part-time. There also was no pro personnel director and Player Personnel Director Lloyd Eaton was required to double as a talent scout. This arrangement was sketchily supplemented by a scouting combine known as CEPO.

The inadequacy of this structure became manifest just one month into Starr's tenure as head coach, when he found himself in the hectic throes of presiding over his first draft. The name of Rick Upchurch, the University of Minnesota's gifted wide receiver/kick returner, was still on the board as the Packer's turn arrived in the fourth round. Starr's only "book" on Upchurch consisted of what he'd read in the newspaper. Accordingly, he turned to the Packers' Big Ten scout to elicit an opinion. The latter did not have enough information upon which to base a decision, however, and the Packers subsequently passed on Upchurch.

Fortunately, the organization today has a vastly improved "Intelligence" network — one which should prevent the repetition of such a costly faux pas. There now are five full-time scouts — Red Cochran, Pete Kettela, Tom Tipps, Ray and Eaton; there is a full-time director of player personnel (Dick Corrick) and a full-time director of pro player personnel (Burt Gustafson). The Packers also are members of a larger, more sophisticated combine known as United Scouting, which embraces 16 clubs, and the team's in-office player data system is fully computerized.

"We have some excellent scouts," Starr observed. "For example, Lloyd Eaton and Tom Tipps have been very successful coaches — Eaton as a head coach and Tipps a very successful coach under (Jim) Owens at Washington as well as at other institutions. The same is true of Baby Ray, who had a successful coaching career at Vanderbilt. Pete Kettela is a very bright, alert scout who has been a coach, and Red Cochran, coached under Coach Lombardi for a number of years. We have football men in the field now in all areas. So I think you can say that, had we had this present structure in 1975, we could have come up with several players, as opposed to just one — Steve Luke."

In the wake of this comprehensive upgrading, Starr is confident Packer drafts henceforth will be uniformly successful. "We believe that we are in a position to draft well every year." he says. "If we don't, it's our own fault."

Although the reconstruction project has been a long and sometimes frustrating one, he has no regrets over committing himself to rebuilding the team as he has.

"We really didn't have much latitude in the early stages of our tenure here," Starr notes. "Let me put it this way — I don't believe we've made any glaring errors as to how we should have begun.

"I look at the first draft," he continued, "And think of how — with just more help — it could have been so much more productive. If we had had our present structure in 1975, we could have walked in and just asked our scouts — as we were forced to do then — to draft for us and we would have come up with three or four players out of that draft — I'm confident — because of our scouting expertise today, our structure and our abilities."

The Packers' personnel problem actually had begun much earlier than that. They date back to the waning days of the now fabled "Lombardi Era," when high draft choices were squandered with inexplicable consistency — both on unproductive choices and on ill-advised trades — the results of which are still being felt today.

In 1967, for example, center Bob Hyland of Boston College and quarterback Don Horn of San Diego State were tapped in the first round. Neither ever performed at the lofty level expected of a No. 1 draft choice and both eventually were traded. The same year, wide receiver Dave Dunaway of Duke was selected in the second round. He was never to catch a pass in a regular season game before being released in 1968.

In 1969, the most disastrous draft in Packer history followed. Defensive tackle Rich Moore (Villanova), guard Dave Bradley (Penn State) and wide receiver John Spilis (Northern Illinois University) were the first three selections. Though all three theoretically could still be playing and contributing to the Packer cause, they long since have passed from the NFL scene.

In 1971, running back Virgil Robinson (Grambling) was a second round pick and failed to make the final roster.

In 1972, home grown Jerry Tagge was plucked in the first round, ostensibly as the potential successor to Starr, then nearing the end of a 16-year career. He lingered through 1974, with modest success, and was released during 1975's training camp.

In 1973, Barry Smith of Florida State was the first round choice. He stayed around for three unproductive seasons before being cut.

That same year, two second round draft choices were dealt to the Miami Dolphins for quarterback Jim Del Gaizo, another transaction which ranks as one of the more bizarre and expensive trades in Packer history. Del Gaizo was dealt to the Giants in 1974 for a third round choice, employed to draft cornerback Mike McCoy in 1976. Then, just one year later, came the granddaddy of all such disasters — the John Hadl exchange which sent five premium draft choices to the Rams for a quarterback in the waning twilight of his career. The Rams subsequently parlayed those 1975 and 1976 choices in four starters — defensive tackle Mike Fanning, cornerbacks Pat Thomas, and Monte Jackson and wide receiver Ron Jessie, the latter secured from Detroit by one of those No. 1 picks.

Hadl, meanwhile, was the quarterback of record as the Packers struggled to a 4-10 record in 1975, then was traded to Houston the following year in the Lynn Dickey deal.

During the period that immediately followed, Starr made a sobering discovery. "We actually were weaker at that point than an expansion team," he said, "because — with the most recent expansion teams' entrance into the league — they were given extra consideration. They not only drafted first in the early rounds, but they also drafted last. They had two additional picks at the end of the second through fifth rounds, then turned right around and started the next round off again. So you might say they're getting three picks at the end of each round — two at the end and one at the beginning."

The Packer coach made another discovery, equally as sobering: There was a distinct lack of leadership at the player level.

"If the club had drafted well during the years between 1967 and 1974, we would have had a layer of leadership there," he explains. "Through maturity, and the resurgence of winning which began here in the '60s, it's the kind of thing that's passed along to the next group and so on but when there are not enough members present, there is no group to really lead. We thus were lacking a maturity level of leadership. We've had to begin to grow our own. That's another reason it takes so long. We're getting some excellent leaders, and they will be even better leaders when they mature more. Maturity nurtures accountability and responsibility.

"It's amazing how irresponsible some are who are so-called adults. They won't accept any blame, they always find an excuse for an error as opposed to standing up and saying, 'It was my fault. I made an error, I'm going to correct it, I'm going to be a better football player because of it.'

That's what the leader, the winner does. The loser seeks an easy way out — he wants to blame everyone else for the mistake."

Taking an overview, Starr sets forth his philosophy, simply and succinctly. "You can't hop-scotch around and put a football team together," he said. "There has to be a definite plan of development, and that's what we've tried to create. Piecemealing it will not get it done. George Allen was very successful building teams through trades — acquiring experienced players through trades. But even one of his finest pupils — Jack Pardee, is building through the draft.

"The Tim Stokes trade was one of necessity because we were really hurting when Mark (Koncar) went down, and Tim played well for us.

"The Lynn Dickey trade was an obvious one. It was a real need — we had to have a quarterback. And I think we got a very fine player — I think it was an equitable trade for both parties. And I believe, had he not been injured, he would be one of the more respected quarterbacks in our league. Even though he's years into his career, we believe he has the capacity to be a fine quarterback for several more years."

Although he remains respectful of the success George Allen had with his "over-the-hill gang" formula, Starr says he has had no second thoughts about having committed himself to structuring his team through the draft.

"I've always felt this is not only the most intelligent way to do it, but by far the superior way, long range," he says. "We have excellent coaches, and we have a very proud, distinguished organization here. By cultivating our own, we can create the kind of atmosphere which will perpetuate winning.

"All we need is to get enough good players — and we're getting them. We're very close to being much, much stronger."

Packers Put Draft Emphasis on Defense

The Packers emphasized defense in their 1980 College Player Draft.

The first three picks, including two first round choices, and seven of the 12 selections were defensive players.

Bruce Clark, Penn State tackle, who was the No. 1 choice and the fourth player chosen in the entire draft, went off to Canada but the next two choices, Linebacker George Cumby, a first rounder obtained as payment in the Willie Buchanan trade, and second choice Mark Lee, a defensive back from Washington, are both due in the Packer fold.

Incidentally, Clark is only the third first choice in Packer history to cross the north border. Quarterback Randy Duncan of Iowa, the first pick in '59, tried Canada but never really made it and dropped out of football after two years. In 1951, first pick Bob Gain, a tackle from Kentucky, jumped to Canada but the Pack traded rights to him to the Browns and he went to Cleveland in '52.

The Packers picked four defensive backs, two linebackers and tackle Clark. Four offensive linemen, including two guards, and one wide receiver, Oklahoma's Fred Nixon, were chosen.

Ironically, this was the first time in Packer history, at least since the draft was started in 1935, that the Bays did not select a running back. Their first two picks a year ago were Eddie Lee Ivery and Steve Atkins, who should fill the bill this year after having their first season cut short by knee injuries.

Here are the Packers' 1980 draft choices and the figures in parentheses designate the order of selection of the 330 players chosen by the 28 teams:

1st Round — Bruce Clark, DT, Penn State (4).

1st — George Cumby, LB, Oklahoma (26), choice from San Diego as part of Willie Buchanan trade.

2nd — Mark Lee, DB, Washington (34).

3rd — Syd Kitson, G, Wake Forest (61).

4th — Fred Nixon, WR, Oklahoma (87).

5th — Choice to Los Angeles for Rick Nuzum (116).

6th — Karl Swanke, G, Boston College (143).

7th — Buddy Aydelette, T, Alabama (169).

8th — Tim Smith, DB, Oregon State (199).

9th — Kelly Saalfeld, C, Nebraska (226).

10th — Jafus White, DB, Texas A & I (253).

11th — Ricky Skiles, LB, Louisville (283).

12th — James Stewart, DB, Memphis State (310).

Here are the top four selections made by the other teams:

The Only Winning Coaches

The two men shown above have something in common.

They are the only winning coaches in Packer history and they got together for this picture on a Saturday afternoon in City Stadium in the fall of 1962. Coach Vince Lombardi is congratulating Curly Lambeau, founder of the Packers, upon his election to the Wisconsin Hall of Fame. The Stadium was later renamed Lambeau Field.

This historic picture is presented to signify the launch of a new decade in the Packers' proud history.

In addition, this year marks the 15th anniversary of Lambeau's death and the 10th of Lombardi's death.

Lambeau died June 1, 1965 of a massive heart attack at the age of 67. He was born in Green Bay, April 9, 1898.

Lombardi died September 3, 1970 of cancer at the age of 57. He was born in Brooklyn, N.Y., June 11, 1913.

Ironically, both later coached the Washington Redskins, Curly in 1952-53 and Vince in 1969 and part of the training season of 1970.

Direct opposites in their personalities, Lambeau and Lombardi were very much alike in their football work. Both were leaders and intense drivers. They were dominant forces in their eras.

And, more important, they were the only coaches to bring the Packers world championships. Lambeau's men won six titles, Lombardi's five.

A NEW DECADE . . . And A Look Back

A new decade . . . new hope . . . and it's got to be better than the 1970s.

The Packers embark on the 1980s with one of the youngest teams in the NFL — one that Coach Bart Starr has molded out of the collegiate draft.

But let's look back a moment and see where the Packers have just been . . . It's a fact: the Packers didn't do well in the 1970s — just two winning seasons in 10.

The decade produced 57 victories, 82 defeats and five ties for a final percentage of .413. Only one decade was worse — the 1950s, with .333.

Those were the only losing decades in the Packers' 61-year history. The other four decades each housed a winning percentage and at least one NFL championship.

The Packers have completed 59 years of National Footbal League games. The first two years, 1919 and 1920, saw the Packers perform as a town team.

Starting in 1921 and through the final league game of 1979, the Packers played 741 league games — not to mention numerous pre-season games and a total of 16 post-season championship contests.

For all league games, the Packers posted 405 victories against 302 losses and 34 ties — a winning percentage of .569. They scored 13,575 points and allowed 11,541.

The Packers outscored their opponents by an average score of 18.3 to 15.5 — just a little under a field goal.

The Packers won 11 NFL championships, which were at one time referred to as "world championships." No other team in the NFL won that many.

There's a bit of irony to all of this — at least on a coachly basis.

The Packers have had eight coaches in their long history — one the first 31 years and seven the next 30 — and only two of them had winning careers.

They, of course, are Curly Lambeau, founder and head coach of the Packers from 1919 through 1949, and Vince Lombardi, head coach from 1959 through 1967.

Curly coached 339 league games and won 213, lost 104 and tied 22 for a percentage of .660. Vince coached 122 league games and won 89, lost 29 and tied four for a .745 winning percentage.

THE FIRST TWO YEARS

Packers played as Town Team in 1919 and 1920. They posted 10-1 record in 1919, scoring 565 points and allowing 12. They had a 9-1-1 record in 1920, scoring 227 points and allowing 24. The Packers joined National Football League as charter member in 1921.

Between them, Lambeau and Lombardi coached 461 games and won 302, lost 133 and tied 26 for a percentage of .683.

The other six coaches worked 280 games and won 103, lost 169 and tied eight for a losing percentage of .382.

Lambeau presided at championships in 1929, 1930, 1931, 1936, 1939 and 1944, while Lombardi won NFL titles in 1961, 1962, 1965, 1966 and 1967.

They are the only coaches in pro football to win three titles in a row. Lambeau's first three titles were won before playoffs were used to determine the champion.

Each lost an NFL playoff game — Lambeau in 1938 and Lombardi in 1960. Lombardi's last two title victories were followed by victories in Super Bowls I and II.

Three coaches separated Lambeau and Lombardi.

Gene Ronzani, a former Chicago Bear star, followed Curly in 1950 and won 14 games in four years. The Packers went to college coaching next and hired Lisle Blackbourn from Marquette University. Blackbourn won 17 games in four years. As a test case, the Packers hired Ray (Scooter) McLean, a former assistant, in 1958 and he won just one game. Lombardi arrived in 1959 and led the Packers into the glorious 1960s.

Since Lombardi, the Packers have had three coaches. Former assistant Phil Bengtson succeeded Lombardi in 1968 and won 20 games in three seasons, a percentage of .487. Dan Devine followed in 1971 and posted 25 wins in four seasons, including a 10-4 for a Central Division title in 1972.

Ironically, Bart Starr, the Pack's quarterback whiz of the 1960s, was an assistant under Devine when he won the Division title.

Starr took over the Packers in 1975 and faced a massive rebuilding job. He led the Pack to 8-7-1 in 1978 but slipped back in 1979. Now, with three strong drafts behind him, Starr starts his sixth year in a stronger position.

Starr's teams won 26 games, lost 47 and tied 1, a percentage of .356.

What's ahead for the 1980s?

Starr, whose Packer career spanned some of the losing 1950s (starting in 1956), all of the 1960s and all but two years of the 1970s, is looking forward to the new decade optimistically now that he has a team that he molded himself out of the draft.

THE HONOR ROLL

The Honor Roll of Packer Players is herewith presented for the fifth time in the 21-year history of the Green Bay Packer Yearbook.

A total of 836 players have now played with the Packers — that is, they have signed a contract and played at least one game.

The first Honor Roll of Players was presented in the first Yearbook in 1960 and it contained 519 names.

Thus, 317 players have been added in the intervening 20 seasons — an average of just under 16 per campaign.

The list was printed next in 1963 and there were 555 players, a jump of 36 over 1960. The team was well set in that period and few new players made it.

The next list came out in 1969 and it had 615 names. Four years later, in 1973, it jumped to 705 — a leap of 90, thus reflecting the drop in the team's success and the influx of players.

Obviously, the turnover in the losing 1970s was considerably higher than the winning 1960s. A total of 221 players were added in the 10 seasons ending in 1979 — about 22 per year. These, of course, include late season replacements for injured players.

The Longevity List had few changes since the last list was printed in 1973. Bart Starr remains as the grand-daddy of all players with 16 active seasons. Ray Nitschke is next with 15 and Forrest Gregg is third with 14. Dave Hanner and Buckets Goldenberg each played 13 years.

Among the long-service newcomers added in the new list were Fred Carr, Gale Gillingham and Dick Himes who joined the 10-year list. Rich McGeorge stopped at nine years. Chester Marcol is the "oldest" of the present team with eight years.

Here's the complete list of Packer players and, for a touch of trivia, the M's and S's are the most popular with 86 and 83 names, respectively, followed by the B's with 75:

We can't compare with the Packers' great longevity, but the Green Bay Packer Yearbook now represents a good slice of Packer history and tradition — almost one third.

The Yearbook has completed two decades of publication ... and this 1980 Yearbook marks the start of our third decade. The Packers are starting their seventh.

The Packer Yearbook is the only continuous publication of its kind in the National Football League. Many teams have started Yearbooks but later discontinued them. Some now have them.

The Packer Yearbook traced the Packers' history closely for each of the past 20 seasons and stands as a unique record for Packer fans in their home state as well as around the country.

Yearbook sales offer proof that the Packers have a huge underground of fans — much like that of Notre Dame in college football. The Yearbook annually receives heavy orders from every state in the Union and many foreign countries.

The Yearbook has a unique tradition ... and we thank the Packers for that.

1961 — Bart Starr becomes one of NFL's best QB's, leads Pack to championship with victory over Giants in Green Bay.

1963 — Paul Hornung is suspended for season for betting on games along with two other NFL players, causes stir in sports.

The Sports Illustrated Covers

Sports Illustrated, the weekly sports magazine which observed its 25th anniversary a year ago, was coming into its own in the 1960s — just about the time the Packers started setting the NFL on fire.

Thanks to their great teams, the Packers were featured on Sports Illustrated covers 14 times in the 1960s and once in the 1970s — plus several other times when other teams were featured. No such records are kept, but the Pack's appearance figures seem safe for an NFL team.

Unlike other teams in the NFL, the Packers have a unique appeal among sports fans nationwide.

But Sports Illustrated wants champions on its covers . . . and come to think of it that's what the Packers are aiming for — a championship.

Sports Illustrated billed itself as "America's First National Sports Weekly" when it started in the fall of 1954. It now has a circulation of 2,250,000.

Sports Illustrated's first cover had a Wisconsin tie. Featured was the Milwaukee Braves' Eddie Mathews swinging at home plate. The scene was recreated in Milwaukee on the 25th anniversary a year ago.

GREEN BAY PACKER ALUMNI

1967 — Bart surrounded by Cowboys.

1967 — Called off bench when Boyd Dowler is injured, Max McGee stars in Super Bowl I with seven pass receptions for 138 yards, two TDs.

1968 — Vince Lombardi gets last ride after victory in Super Bowl II. He had told his players he was resigning as coach before game.

1975 — Four years after retiring as a player, Bart Starr becomes head coach of the team he played with for 16 seasons.

1962 — Jim Taylor likes to sting tacklers.

1966 — Bart leads hot war in West.

1966 — Taylor's muddied in title game.

1968 — Brown and Gregg carry Pack hopes.

1968 — Super Bowl II foes Mercein, Dixon.

1968 — Nitschke calls Pack Best Ever.

1968 — Donny Anderson stopped by Colts.

THE RECORD BOOK

Newcomers

Mike Butler starts 77-yard TD run with fumble against Minnesota. Giving chase is center Dennis Swilley.

Five newcomers have made it to the Packer Record Book and, surprise, one of them was a defensive player.

Joining the all-time list are Quarterback David Whitehurst, Receivers James Lofton and Paul Coffman, Kicker Tom Birney and Defensive End Mike Butler.

Butler was the only actual record breaker. Big Mike recovered a fumble by Viking QB Tommy Kramer (after he was hit by Ezra Johnson) and returned it 77 yards for a touchdown in the Pack's 19-7 victory in Milwaukee Nov. 11.

The previous record was the 60 yards returned by the late Henry Jordan against the Cowboys in Dallas Nov. 29, 1964. Jordan picked up a fumble by QB John Roach when hit by Linebacker Lee Roy Caffey in a 45-21 Packer victory.

Whitehurst figured in four departments — third in most passes completed season, second and fourth in most passes completed one game and fourth in most passes had intercepted one season.

Coffman's 56-catch total ranked third on the all-time list and Lofton's yardage total of 968 was fourth.

Birney kicked four field goals in the Pack's victory in Detroit last December to join record-holders Paul Hornung, Jerry Kramer and Chester Marcol.

The following records are presented with apologies to all the Packer stars who played before records were kept:

The Unforgettable Monday Nighter (Green Bay 27 New England 14)

Don Langenkamp — Green Bay Press-Gazette

Monday, October 1, 1979 did not dawn with great promise for Green Bay Packer fans.

Nor did the upcoming game that evening with the invading New England Patriots titillate the television trio of Howard Cosell, Frank Gifford and Don Meredith from ABC.

Only the Patriots, who launched the 1979 campaign with visions of Super Bowl dancing through their heads, were licking their chops over the approaching festivities.

Many Packer fans were inwardly cringing over the prospect of this historic, first-ever Lambeau Field appearance on Monday Night Football. The majority of the Packer faithful thought the approaching misadventure could be an acute embarrassment for the franchise that had recorded dynastic achievements little more than a decade before.

Hopes for the 1979 season were already at a low ebb. The surprising Tampa Bay Bucanneers had roared off to a 5-0 start, while the Pack had stumbled to a 1-3 record. A loss here, fans were saying, and any hopes for a turnaround in 1979 could be forgotten.

Respectability was the watchword on this Monday. ABC desperately hoped Green Bay could make it a respectable game because a rout would leave the ratings in shambles. And the fans, save for the uninhibitedly optimistic, hoped with equal fervence that the Packers could save face with a respectable showing in front of the nation's eyes.

So the script was already written. ABC was fully prepared for a yawner. The Patriots were fully prepared to move into a tie with the Miami Dolphins in the AFC East with a 4-1 record. And the nationwide television audience was ready to watch an hour of the game before switching channels to "Lou Grant."

Fortunately, none of this rampant pessimism found its way into the team confines on Lombardi Avenue. There, the Packer players and coaches were preparing a surprise that later would be universally recognized as the nugget of the 1979 season.

Green Bay Packers 27, New England Patriots 14. The score emblazoned on the Lambeau Field scoreboard was hailed in a cascade of lusty cheers and whoops later that evening. Fans who had arrived with all the enthusiasm of approaching the gallows shouted themselves hoarse after the Packers bludgeoned — not beat, bludgeoned — the Patriots into dazed submission.

It was more than any Packer backer had dared dream. It was more than any team member or coach had dared hope. And it forced the ABC triumverate to grope for superlatives that it didn't think would be necessary on this night.

What was the anatomy of this upset that left Coach Bart Starr hoarse of voice and puffed up with pride? It began with meticulous preparation and it ended with a high level of execution. But the catalyst was emotion; the Packers were in an emotional state of readiness that left New England gasping for air and groping for postgame explanations.

Starr fully realized on the morning of the game that fiery pre-game rhetoric would not be necessary. The fact that players on 26 other NFL teams and fans from coast-to-coast would be watching was enough to get any athlete's adrenalin flowing. Nevertheless, the team breakfasted together and Starr spoke to his players.

It was, by several accounts, a quietly intimate sort of talk; the kind that strengthens the bond between a head coach and 45 players. And it was effective. Placekicker Chester Marcol was to say later, "This morning Coach Starr was at his best. I had a tremendous feeling when I left."

It became obvious that evening that Marcol's emotional state was shared by 44 teammates. Before delving into the strategic ploys generated by the Packer brain trust, it should be noted that this game was played on a previously unachieved emotional level. Crunching blocks and vicious tackles were delivered time and again. And that, as is usually the case, provided the essence of victory.

A slightly stunned Steve Grogan, the target of a mayhem-minded pass rush by the Packers all night, said after the game, "It was one of the most physical games I've every played in."

Ironically, the pass rush was a major source of concern. Green Bay's strongest pass rusher, defensive end Ezra Johnson, was out with an ankle injury. But replacement Robert Barber came up with perhaps the finest game of his professional career and registered two of the five Packer sacks.

The linebacking corps was extremely active and the secondary was in a larcenous frame of mind. Each of the defensive backs — Johnny Gray, Steve Luke, Estus Hood and Mike McCoy — plucked off a Patriot pass and outside linebacker Mike Douglass' theft of another made it an even five for the night.

The offensive line was operating at an equally high rate of competence. It allowed quarterback David Whitehurst to be sacked only once, and it helped the offense convert three interceptions into Green Bay touchdowns. The other TD came on a picturesque 74-yard drive that put the Pack up 14-7 in the second quarter.

Defensively, the Pack unveiled a 3-4 defense that apparently had been discarded during the pre-season. While the 3-4 alignment was effective, however, the Packers didn't stick with a pat hand. Like a bobbing and weaving boxer constantly keeping his opponent off guard, Green Bay jumped in an out of the 3-4 through the game.

The blitz was the second part of the effective one-two defensive punch. Two and sometimes three of the linebackers would shoot the gap on the unsuspecting Grogan, and, at times, they would be followed by more blitzing players from the safety positions. While Grogan refused to admit that the Packers' departure from earlier games rattled him, Green Bay linebacker Douglass said, "The blitz confused them. They didn't know how to read it. We had never played it before. I think their whole offensive strategy was thrown off. And I thought after awhile Grogan got a little erratic."

Indeed, Grogan managed to complete just seven of 16 passes in the second half when it was up to him to bring New England back.

As much as anything, it was the Packers' second half performance that sealed the victory. True, Green Bay led, 20-14, at the half. But the Patriots had just scored with 1:01 left in the second quarter, hinting strongly of a comeback that would wreck the well-laid plans of the upset-minded Packers.

Instead, the Pack stuck to its swashbuckling approach. The defense didn't lose any of its tenacity, and the offense continued to keep the Pats off guard by throwing frequently on first down.

High above the battlefield, those three football sages from ABC were verbally scrambling to recover from earlier comments about the Packers. At the game's outset, Cosell, Gifford and Meredith made no bones about the lack of confidence they felt about the Pack's chances.

Meredith freely questioned the ability of Green Bay's defensive line. Gifford wondered whether Grogan would pick apart the Packer secondary at will. Cosell droned on about how Starr was still fighting the legendary Glory Years.

Little, if any, mention was made about the possibility of an upset. It was, the triumverate maintained, a match between an injury-riddled also-ran and a team of championship caliber.

When it became evident that a major mid-stream switch was in order, Cosell & Co. did so in exuberant fashion. Suddenly the Packers became a collection of promising young players. And the Patriots became a group of over-confident fat cats, ripe for the taking.

But the ABC trio wasn't the only sideshow this game produced. The fans — those same fans who had approached this game with great apprehension — rid themselves of frustration.

For one glorious night, the eyes of the nation were once again on Green Bay. For one night, the memories of league-wide dominance were revived. For one night, the fans reveled in the brief rebirth of a legend.

So they stood and screamed and yelled themselves hoarse. They held nothing back, and that was fortunate because leftover cheers may have been wasted on the rest of the season.

Tuesday morning the Sheriff's Department got several calls from wives whose husbands were still missing in action. And for weeks after, there were "Patriot Parties" held in the Green Bay area, where groups of fans would gather and watch video replays of Magic Monday.

"They (the fans) were absolutely sensational," Bart Starr said the next day. "I can't remember them ever being more rabid. You could just feel the electricity from the time they kicked off."

As it turned out, potential momentum from the stunning win did not carry over to ensuing contests. But no one could say the Packers lacked a flair for the dramatic. The maiden run on Monday Night Football at Lambeau Field was of Emmy-winning stature.

Herb Gains Canton Berth

Herb Adderley is the 13th Packer to win election to the Pro Football Hall of Fame at Canton, Ohio.

A perennial all-pro defensive back and special teams standout, Adderley is the sixth member of Coach Vince Lombardi's powerhouses of the 1960s to gain pro football's highest honor. He joins Lombardi, Jim Taylor, Bart Starr, Forrest Gregg and Ray Nitschke in the Hall. Other Packers in Canton are Curly Lambeau, Cal Hubbard, Johnny Blood, Don Hutson, Clarke Hinkle, Mike Michalske and Arnie Herber.

Adderley, Deacon Jones, Bob Lilly and Jim Otto were elected to the Hall last January and were enshrined in elaborate ceremonies in front of the Hall of Fame Building August 2.

Adderley played nine years with the Packers, starting as a first draft choice out of Michigan State in 1961. After the 1969 season Herb was traded to Dallas where he played three years. Adderley played in four of the first six Super Bowls, two with each team.

An all-Big Ten running back in college, Adderley was tried at both offense and defense with the Pack. Late in his rookie season Adderley was pressed into service when Henry Gremminger was hurt in Detroit. Adderley made a key interception at left corner and from then on he became a star defender.

Many insist that the Lions' Dick (Night Train) Lane and Adderley were the two best ever to play the left corner spot.

How Packers Were Built

The Packers are home grown and young. Coach Bart Starr is building the Packers through the college player draft and already 27 drafted players became Packers in the last four years.

Eight draftees made the team in 1979, seven each in 1977 and 1978, and five in 1976. Nine free agents played with the Pack in '79 but this was due to the large number of injuries, requiring the addition of players well into the season.

Here, at a glance, is how the Packers were built and, don't forget, these athletes will be challenged by the 1980 crop of draft picks and free agents.

COFFMAN FINDS SECURITY

By Bob McGinn
Green Bay Press-Gazette

For the first time in his football career Paul Coffman can take something for granted.

Barring injury or a colossal reversal of form, Coffman is a safe bet to be the Packers' starting tight end this season.

Security is something Paul Coffman has never enjoyed before. But few players in the National Football League have worked harder for it.

The Packers told Coffman what they thought of him a year ago with the stunning release of 10-year veteran tight end Rich McGeorge. It wasn't a popular decision among Packer faithful. The Packers knew that, but only time would prove them right.

Coffman probably exceeded even the Packers' most optimistic hopes. He blocked well, he caught everything thrown his way, he avoided mistakes and he got deep on occasion.

It all added up to 56 receptions, the most ever by a Packer tight end. No other tight end in the National Football Conference caught more than 51 in 1979.

When combined with James Lofton's 54 catches, it marked the first time in the Packers' 61-year history that two Green Bay receivers caught 50 or more passes in one season.

When the NFC squad for the Pro Bowl was released, however, Henry Childs of New Orleans and Detroit's David Hill made it at tight end. Coffman was one of six vote-getters, but he also ranked behind Philadelphia's Keith Krepfle, Tampa Bay's Jimmie Giles and Dallas' Billy Joe Dupree.

"I thought that personally I deserved it," Coffman says matter-of-factly, but that's going to just be one of my goals now, to get to the Pro Bowl."

Paul Coffman finds it hard to relax on Packer bench.

One would be foolish to bet against Coffman making it happen.

Ever since he came out of Chase Rural High School in Chase, KS, people haven't exactly coveted his athletic ability. That's understandable. Coffman isn't a natural, and it wasn't until last season that he gained his physical maturity.

But long odds never meant much to him.

At Chase, Coffman played on the varsity for four years. One might expect that, because Chase High only has about 100 students. But even at that modest level of competition Coffman wasn't a dominating-type performer.

"I wasn't head and shoulders above anybody else," recalled Coffman.

He wasn't at Kansas State University, either. In fact, his rite of passage there was so trying that he gave serious consideration to quitting football soon after he arrived as a walk-on.

"The first day of practice I got three stitches on my chin, and then about a week later I got knocked out," Coffman remembered. "My whole freshman year I never suited up for one varsity game, and I only played sparingly on the junior varsity team.

"I got there and they tried me at fullback. That lasted for a couple weeks, then they put me at linebacker. That was for a couple weeks. Then, one of the tight ends got hurt or somebody quit and they put me at tight end.

"Oh, yeah, I thought about it (quitting) several times. There were days when I'd go out there and we'd be running other team's plays and I kind of wondered if I ever would get my chance.

"But football is something I liked, and the association I had with the other players I liked. It just didn't seem like I would fit in living in a fraternity or another dorm without that jock atmosphere."

Things got better by the following spring. He moved up to third-string tight end, and he received a scholarship. But Coffman paid the price for even the slightest advance.

"I never even knew Paul Coffman existed until fall two-a-days before his sophomore year," said Kansas State publicist Glen Stone. "He came back in unbelievable shape, and I remember him outrunning everybody by 40 yards or so in the 40s. He was running 51-second quarters. He was obviously bound and determined to catch someone's attention."

Midway through the season Coffman alternated at the position when the Wildcats began using their tight ends to carry in plays. He caught seven passes as a sophomore and then 15 more as a junior, when he continued as a messenger.

Pro football seemed light years away.

"K-State had bad teams (a 0-21 record in the Big Eight during his final three years) and nobody was being taken," said Coffman. "Shoot, my goal wasn't to play pro ball but to worry about my future here."

Calamity struck after his junior season. At a sorority formal, Coffman contacted food poisoning and eventually dropped about 20 pounds. When two blue-chip high school tight ends signed at K-State, Coffman faced the prospect of being third-string as a senior.

Coffman's only recourse was hard work. And when the two freshman were found wanting early in the season, Coffman finally became a full-fledged regular. His 25 catches and three touchdowns earned him second-team all-Big Eight honors.

Certain he wanted at least a shot at the NFL, but not expecting to be drafted, Coffman wrote letters to all 28 pro teams. Seattle was the only club to respond, but all the Seahawks were willing to provide was a tryout if Coffman paid his own way.

Meanwhile, Coffman's roommate, All-America linebacker Gary Spani, was getting requests from pro scouts and coaches for individual workouts prior to the draft.

When the Packers' representative arrived in Manhattan, then linebacker coach John Meyer, he was greeted by Spani and a blue-eyed, curly-haired, eager young man. Spani, now a starter for the Kansas City Chiefs, introduced Coffman.

"I asked Coach Meyer if he minded if I ran through some drills, even though I wasn't a linebacker," chuckled Coffman, clearly savoring the memory. "He said he didn't know much about working out tight ends, but that it was fine because I could give Gary some competition in the drills."

The workout was vintage Coffman. Meyer remembers him diving for balls and charging through timings as if nothing mattered more to him than to play pro football. It probably didn't. He signed a two-year contract, worth $24,000 his rookie season, with the Packers shortly after the draft.

Then he set about trying to make the team.

"I did everything I could to impress them in the mini-camp that year," said Coffman, "and so I survived and came back in July. They had already cut Bert Askson, but Eason Ramson had been drafted and he had said in the papers where he thought he could be the team's starter. He didn't impress me that much, but I still didn't unpack my car. I just took up what I needed every night."

One of the negatives on Coffman was weight. He checked in at 218, but practice sessions in humid weather trimmed him down to 212. He figured he would be long gone if the Packers knew he was that low.

Coffman had endured too many setbacks in his career to let that foil him. So on weigh-in day he slipped into a pair of baggy shorts and inserted a five-pound weight into his supporter. When he weighed 217-218, everything was fine and he was on his way to a berth on the final roster.

Used exclusively in short-yardage situations in tandem with McGeorge, Coffman blocked well. But his marginal speed and size seemed to make his future somewhat uncertain.

However, he reported at 228 last summer and then stepped off a 4.65-second clocking in the 40-yard timings. His time had been 4.75 as a rookie.

The Packers were impressed, and when McGeorge was deemed expendable Coffman was their tight end. He didn't disappoint them.

"In production and passes caught and yardage yield per catch and his blocking ability, he's got to be the best one in our division," said passing game coach Lew Carpenter. "He had a great year for us."

With Coffman, the tight end again became an integral element in the Packers' passing attack. By midseason, Coffman was catching seven passes for 106 yards at Tampa Bay and five for 116 at Miami. He feels his two-touchdown, 6-79 effort late in the year against Chicago was his high-water mark.

Carpenter tosses out accolades freely when he describes Coffman. The Packer assistant likes to emphasize Coffman's work habits and blocking.

"He's a self-made pro," said Carpenter. "He was one of those guys who came in with the desire and ambition not to have his ass run off, and he's goin' to make it, and that's what he accomplished.

"And I know there's not a better blocking tight end in the league," he added admiringly. "Paul graded out well enough to win in the running game area."

The Packers' all-time top tight end is probably Ron Kramer. But Carpenter feels Coffman may rank with him by the time his career is finished.

"Ron Kramer, you know, was a stud," Carpenter said. "He had all the ability in the world ... big, fast, he could do just about anything he wanted. If he had Coffman's attitude, he could have. If he (Coffman) continues his performance of last year, he could become one of the top tight ends in the Packers' history."

Coffman is well aware of the fact that opponents will be more prepared for him this season. Lofton was the subject of extensive double coverage last year, and Coffman is the first to admit it made his job easier.

"You'd like for him to increase his production, but it's something that's going to be tough to top," said Carpenter. "If he just maintains, it's going to be a plus factor for us.

"Tight end takes a helluva beating, and Paul's the type of guy that takes a pretty good beating every game because he's an all-out type who makes up for a lot of his inadequacies by being very intense about it."

Coffman is also very intense when it comes to analyzing his own abilities. Self-confidence comes naturally. For example, he said the Packers made a good move when they didn't draft a tight end last April. "I figured it wouldn't have done them a lot of good. I'm going to be starting."

His confidence, however, doesn't blind him to the fact that he still has not proved himself over several years — the mark of a top professional.

"I was starting to think I was pretty good, and that I was just about the best blocking tight end around," Coffman confessed. "Well, we played the Lions the first time in Milwaukee, and they played an overshifted defense where Dave Pureifory was over me.

"The first play I had to block him he hit me with a forearm and leveled me. It intimidated me, and after that I probably had the worst game of my career blocking. And it made me see that there's always going to be someone there who's better than you."

While Coffman began last season almost anonymously, James Lofton entered it as one of the Packers' most publicized players.

Statistically, Lofton had slightly better numbers in his second season. His receptions rose from 46 to 54, and his average per catch went up from 17.7 to 17.9.

Seldom, however, during his Pro Bowl rookie season did the former No. 1 draft choice from Stanford drop passes. In 1979, according to Carpenter's figures, Lofton missed eight passes that he should have caught.

Then, there was his run-ins with the crowds at Lambeau Field. They reached a peak Nov. 4 against the New York Jets when Lofton appeared to make an obscene gesture toward the team's fans and, later, made profane comments about them.

Lofton admitted the situation was serious, and hoped the fans' reaction was not deep-seated. Carpenter has similar concerns, but he's confident that normal maturation will benefit Lofton considerably.

"I think Lofton went through a time where he felt the whole winning and losing kind of rested on his shoulders," Carpenter said. "He probably played under immense pressure, because that's the type of guy he is. He probably felt he had to contribute more.

"If a guy's under a lot of pressure, and he's at an emotional peak, and someone calls him a big jerk or a big clown or all the other beautiful language they use, first thing he'll do is have a rebuttal.

"You don't like to see it happen, but I think it will come with a little more maturity with Lofton. As he gets a little older, he'll just shrug it off and keep right on going. Lofton's going to have to be the one to change, because fans never change. That's a sure bet."

Carpenter, though, wouldn't want Lofton to change his playing style one bit.

"I wouldn't trade him for any other receiver in the league," he said flatly. "Potentially, Lofton has more tools than any of the receivers playing today. I'm talking about size, speed and he's got the same kind of intensity Coffman has."

Coffman and Lofton ... Lofton and Coffman. The Packers appear to have two of the best young players at their positions in the NFL.

RUNNING BACKS HEALTHY . . . and Experienced

Tony Walter — Green Bay Press-Gazette

It was the type of comment Eddie Lee Ivery had come to expect from his teammates, these friends of his.

"Hey, Ivery," a lineman hollered as the two met in the Packer weight room during the middle of winter. "Think we can get more than four plays out of you this year?"

Together, they laughed about it.

There was a time, not too long ago, when nobody laughed about Eddie Lee Ivery's infamous knee.

The injury, the way it happened, when it happened, its effect on the 1979 Packers, and the unprecedented string of knee injuries it seemed to launch, made pretty good crying material for Packer coaches, players and fans.

In truth, the impact of Ivery's injury and subsequent surgery could not be understated. It absolutely ruined the 1979 season for the Packers before it really started.

The injury was a serious one. The effect of Ivery's sudden stop on the Soldier Field artificial turf ripped the interior cruciate ligament in his right knee. When team doctors went in to take a look two days later, they also removed cartilage and pronounced the rookie running back a spectator for the remainder of the season.

Eddie Lee Ivery . . . "a very positive young man"

It hardly seemed fair. The Packers and Chicago Bears were playing their first regular season game of 1979 and the Packers were given a fair, country shot to improve upon their 8-7-1 record of 1978 and contend for the Central Division title.

Ivery had shown such promise in the pre-season and, even in this game, gained 24 yards in three carries before the dreaded incident.

Ivery was expected to be the cure for many of the Packers' offensive ills. The ability to run outside with speed and inside with power made the Georgia Tech running back the talk of training camp.

Nobody expected what happened in Chicago Sept. 2.

"When he went down a lot of jaws dropped," said fullback Barty Smith, who stepped in to fill the void.

"It was," said Assistant Coach Zeke Bratkowski, who handles the running backs, "just a disaster. He had been so productive for us."

The Packers never really got over the loss of Ivery, but they had little time to lick their wounds.

Fellow rookie Steve Atkins, after rushing for 110 yards against New Orleans in the second game of the season, followed Ivery to the operating table for knee surgery.

Smith, who played some of the best football of his career after Ivery was injured, hurt his knee against New Orleans but continued to play with the pain. Finally, after the victory over New England and a loss to Atlanta, Smith packed it in and became the third Packer running back to have his knee opened up.

That wasn't the end of it either. Regular running back Terdell Middleton, who enjoyed such success in 1978, played most of the 1979 season with a sore shoulder, an injury which greatly diminished his effectiveness. After the season, he underwent corrective surgery.

All that left Eric Torkelson, Nate Simpson, Walt Landers and Rickey Patton to carry the ball through the balance of the 1979 season. The results, despite plucky efforts, were predictable.

Middleton was the leading rusher for the season with 495 yards, a 3.8 average. Torkelson gained 401. The leading scorer on the ground was quarterback David Whitehurst, with four touchdowns.

There were some bright spots, such as Middleton's 135-yard performance against the Vikings in Milwaukee, Simpson's 121 yards against the Lions in Milwaukee and Atkins' 110 yards against the Saints in Milwaukee — all in Packer victories.

But the Packer running attack was generally so pathetic that in five games the team's leading rusher was held to 35 yards or fewer. In those five games, all losses, the Packers scored a total of 37 points.

In three other games, no Packer gained more than 63 yards in one day. Those were also losses.

It was the Ivery injury that got the blame for most of the problems.

"A lot of the offense was geared for his (Ivery's) type of running," said Smith, "where the fullback has to run to the outside."

Nothing came easy for the running backs. Torkelson played several games with a painful leg injury. Simpson was forced to play fullback for awhile, a position that left the 190-pound back to block some of the league's bigger linebackers. Patton was salvaged from Atlanta and produced a 99-yard performance in the season finale at Detroit.

Still, while the 1979 season was a near wipe-out for Packer running backs, it apparently has left few scars. The Packer braintrust is hoping for a 1980 performance to help Packer fans forget there ever was a 1979.

The healing process has been good. Smith was far enough along in his rehabilitation process last December that he actually could have played if the stakes had been high enough. Middleton's shoulder surgery was of the routine variety and was successful. Atkins has healed more slowly but trainer Dominic Gentile forecasts a complete recovery.

Nothing could be better for Ivery. He dedicated himself to his rehabilitation program last fall and has, according to Gentile, followed his designated program perfectly.

"We check four things," said Gentile. "We check the size of the leg first, the circumference, and Ivery's leg is already bigger than his other one. We check his range of motion and he's fine there. We check for strength and he's just as strong in both legs. The final check is running and we'll have to wait to see about that. The bottom line is Sept. 9 (date of the Packer opener against Chicago.)"

Ivery's recovery regimen has impressed Bratkowski as well.

"Eddie Lee Ivery is a special personality," he said. "The way he's worked on his knee is unbelievable. He's a very positive young man."

The Packers obviously felt comfortable with the set of running backs coming back for 1980 because they completely ignored offensive backs in the college draft in May.

"We've got lots of depth," said Bratkowski. "We've also got experienced people. Eddie Lee and Steve (Atkins) both have a training camp under their belts and the rest are all experienced people. We've now got five or six backs who are capable of going in when we need them."

Bratkowski finds at least one positive result of the 1979 injuries.

"It gave the other backs some additional experience," he said. "It's one thing to go in late in the game and it's another thing to prepare the whole week knowing you're going to be the starter."

The return of healthy, experienced backs gives Bratkowski and Coach Bart Starr a very competitive situation in the backfield. Last year, Ivery was expected to push Smith out of the starting fullback position, and the same showdown looms in 1980.

"I put myself in that position (having to win starting job) every year," said Smith, described by Bratkowski as a "real professional" for the way he handled the challenge last year. "I'm not a superstar but I don't consider myself marginal either. I just play as hard as I can and I know if I train hard and don't make it, it just wasn't meant to be. But I really feel good. In fact, I've never felt better."

Terdell Middleton

Steve Atkins

Atkins demonstrated a different running style for Packer fans last season, a deceptive lope that often made it appear he was running slower than he was. His 60-yard jaunt against the Saints in Milwaukee was the longest run from scrimmage for the Packers all season.

Middleton should have the luxury of playing without a bum shoulder in 1980. "He was protecting his shoulder so much last year," Bratkowski said. "He didn't run aggressively. You could see he was playing with a lot of pain."

Nevertheless, Middleton climbed to the 15th spot on the all-time Packer rushing list, needing just three yards to pass MacArthur Lane. He needs just 493 to jump to seventh place.

Torkelson's worth to the Packers was made obvious again in 1979. He played both halfback and fullback, and ranked fourth on the team in pass receptions with 19.

Despite the depth, Bratkowski would like to find a regular starting backfield.

"We'll have the luxury of being able to substitute but you've got to go with a consistent lineup in this league," Bratkowski said. "Look at all the winning teams, like Pittsburgh with Franco Harris. How many times did Ottis Anderson carry the ball for the Cardinals last year? That repetition is important because the line develops confidence and gets more aggressive."

Bratkowski isn't trying to name the starting lineup yet. He, and everybody else, just hopes it won't be the last survivors.

Changes in the Packer Family

The Packer Family has undergone considerable change since the 1979 season ended — on and off the field.

Three new coaches were hired and one major change in coaching assignment was made by Head Coach Bart Starr.

Nine new directors were elected to the board of Green Bay Packers, Inc., and a class of non-voting directors emeritus was formed.

The new coaches are Ross Fichtner, 41, former Cleveland Browns defensive back and Chicago Bear coaching aide, who replaces Dick LeBeau as defensive backfield coach; Tom Lovat, 41, former Stanford University line coach, who will assist Ernie McMillan with the offensive line; and John Marshall, 33, former University of California special teams coach, who will handle the Pack's special teams and assist with the linebackers.

John Meyer, former linebacker coach, was named defensive coordinator to replace Dave Hanner, who thus closed out 27 years as a Packer player and coach.

Off the field, Lee Remmel, publicity director, was named to replace Chuck Lane as director of public relations.

On the corporate front, John Stiles of Green Bay was named to the executive committee to replace C. J. Renard. The nine new directors named were Peter Platten III, John Fabry, Gene Sladky, Rosemary Hinkfuss, Theodore Jamison, Dick Dougherty, Hollis Bridenhagen, Paul Kelly and Judge George Burns. Directors emeritus are Charles Mathys, John Stathas, L. E. Liebmann, H. J. Olson, Ed Schuster, Glen Humphrey, Lee Joannes and Don Hutson.

Dominic Olejniczak, onetime mayor of Green Bay, was reelected Packer president for a record 23rd consecutive term.

The official Packer directory follows:

LEAGUE SECTION

(Pages 51 to 63)

SERIES RECORD

The "series record" shown with each team in the League Section shows how the Packers fared with their various opponents.

Added up, the record shows 323 Packer wins and 279 wins by the opposition — not to mention 22 ties.

The record can be a little confusing. You late-comers might smile when you see the Packers with a 16-8 edge over the all-powerful Super Bowl Steelers. Obviously, the Packers were giving the Steelers a hard time in earlier years.

For years, the only team with an edge on the Pack was the Bears. With considerable losing in the 1970's, the Packers have now dropped behind the Vikings, Rams and 49ers.

The Packers have a 15-18 record against former American Football League teams and the expansion clubs of the 1970s.

Packer Schedule Tough Despite Foes .476 Record

The Packers' 12 opponents in 1980 had a composite won-lost percentage of .476 in 1979.

Sounds like a soft schedule coming up for Green Bay's 60th season in the NFL.

Definitely not. And for several reasons.

First off, the Packers, themselves, finished 1979 with a .313 percentage — 163 points below the foes' average, on their final 5-11 record.

Next, the low percentage by the opponents is discolored by the fact that two of them, the Lions and 49ers, each posted .125 on 2-14 records.

It is interesting to note that the combined opponent ratio for the Pack's eight home games is .445. The road figure is .507.

This is good, of course, for the Pack but here again it must be remembered that those two aforementioned .125 teams are on the home card. The Lions are also on the road schedule.

Those are mostly the figures and, as they say, liars figure and figures lie. Let's look at the opposition and be prepared for another murderous schedule.

Broken down into fourths, the Pack's 16-game schedule gives Green Bay a home break in the early going. The Bays play three of their first four games and five of their first eight at home. They play one of their next four and three of their last eight at home.

The Packers play five teams that won 10 or more games in 1979, including Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh, which posted 12-4. The Bays play the Steelers in the ninth game on the road.

Ironically, the Rams, who lost to Pitt in Super Bowl XIV, posted only a 9-7 league record. They are the Pack's third opponent — in Los Angeles.

The Packers start the new campaign against the Bears in Green Bay September 7 — the first such happening since 1969 when the Packers made off with a 17-0 verdict. A year ago, the Packers opened for the first time in Chicago and came home a 6-3 loser.

The Packers won't be seen on Monday night television this year despite their major upset of the New England Patriots on a hard-to-forget Monday nighter in Green Bay in 1979.

The Pats' final 9-7 reading didn't harm their Monday Night fever. They're on three times—against the Broncos, Oilers and Dolphins. The Broncos and Raiders are also on three Cosell shows.
